You've heard it before, now you'll hear it again...Can any good thing come out of Nazareth and in this case Atlanta, Georgia by way of Compton, California and Buffalo, New York. We had the rock legend Rick James and once held home for Brian McKnight (Dr. Dre's his cousin) and many others. He's a celebrity in his own right; having to his credit 7,000 miles on a ten speed bike for those less fortunate.

Now on his forth time he's taking to the long dusty roads of America, not to prove he can do it, but to further show his commitment to helping other while connecting with corporate, philanthropists, blue and white collar workers on his theme; BIKE4 HIPE "For the Least of These" Humanitarian Campaign.

Watch his day to day struggles, what he will encounters as he travels from city to city, state to state, and county to country; while getting his message across to every human being that has a ipad, ipod, lap-top, desk-top computer, TV, radio, newspaper, magazine, billboard, any social link or straight from his website. See the obstacles, possible dangers, people that he encounters from the poor house to the White House, from blue collar to white collar. Listen to his message that he gives in The State of the Human Race Address and how it changes people's lives from place to place. See the weather conditions, the responses he'll get from everyday people either encouraging or discouraging his efforts.

You must agree, this is not your everyday political, social or civil rights campaign. It's a campaign like no other joining people in helping people. Watch him as he stops in on transitional housing, veteran and local hospitals, children and adult daycares, poor areas, homeless areas, and more. From time to time he will not only be giving hope, but means to assist. Whether its money, a home, a car, encouragement, clothing or food. Watch and see the outcome in each situation as human beings are touched by the life of this biker.

There will be stories of everyday people trying to survive in a place we call the Home of the Free and the land of the Brave. Where we sing, God bless America, but the blessings seems one sided. He has a message of resolve, solutions, peace, relief, joy and the pursuit of happiness. Watch as he raises millions of dollars in this 3,000 mile national and international ride of his life.
